I have a different question than this one: has anyone tried using Boson for the CCNA? From your experience, what advantages do you see to using Boson as a test prep material compared to using a site like Pass4sure or Mocks? A: From the company website: Boson ExSim-Max exam simulator simulates real-world labs, exams and network labs to improve your skills to pass your exams the first time. They go onto say that they incorporate real network and system traffic, and are based on real lab environments: Live traffic and simulated labs to build your experience in real labs Real lab environments, to improve your experience in real labs Captured traffic from IT exams, to improve your knowledge in real IT exams. So, the question that you have is rather unclear. If it relates to CCNA itself, then you are trying to find a way to test your knowledge of CCNA, as opposed to using a product that requires you to purchase for the purpose of practicing or preparing for a test. (Perhaps it's a CCNA question that says "What do you do to pass the CCNA exam?"; in that case, try to use your own knowledge and not use the products) If you are actually reading a question that states "I have a different question than this one", then it was actually not answered in the first question that you posted. At the age of fourteen, Chagny went to work as an assistant in a shop in a wholesale stationery company. In the mid-1890s, Chagny was briefly an apprentice at the Ecole de peinture et de sculpture where he met Pierre Bonnard.
